

ABSTRACT

Private printing using network-based imaging allows a user of a client computing device to select an option to enable private printing via a network service or web page. Additionally, in accordance with another aspect of the private printing, both an identification of a user and a print request is received at a network service representing a printer. The printer then waits to print the requested document until the user is in close physical proximity to the printer.